

Flow Chart For Candidate Selection

- Emotions play a crucial role in candidate selection during interviews or pre-recorded video assessments. Positive emotions like enthusiasm, confidence, and optimism can create a strong impression, showcasing the candidate's engagement and self-assurance. On the other hand, negative emotions, such as anxiety or hesitation, may suggest a lack of preparation or uncertainty. Recruiters often view emotional expressiveness as an indicator of interpersonal skills, adaptability, and overall fit for the company's culture. Thus, the emotional tone of a candidate's responses can influence hiring decisions significantly.
- This is the flowchart which is showing how I can calculate the final total score to select the candidate based on the factors like emotions, gaze, transcript.

